This one is for the Adults who have Children in their lives. Hello there! :)
Having Children or Younger Ones in your life is possibly one of the greatest blessings of all. Children are amazing and can motivate pretty amazing transformation in our lives. I am a mother, so, having a Child of my own has made a pretty big difference in my life. A difference to the better!

I remember when I was about 18 or 19 years old, I was at work once and at some point a regional manager mentioned to all of us at the retail store where I worked at the time that her best friend had just learned she was pregnant. We all smiled and offered the usual "congratulations". It was very interesting to see her face as she said: "Oh, my! She is excited and I don't understand it! Can you imagine? I cannot think of having a Child taking my time away, not being able to go wherever I feel like going, whenever I please!!!!????? Oh, and not to mention not being able to purchase whatever I wish for myself because now I have to think of the baby first and what he/she needs before I go get my new pair of boots????!!!!!! Forget about that!!!!!"

I was truly puzzled! Completely lost! I remember at that precise moment rethinking my own wishes and beliefs. I always LOVED Children with all my heart, all Children. Always had a special love for both Children and Elders. If there was one thing I always dreamed of before the end of my time on Earth was to have a Child! As I listened to her, I had to go within. It was interesting as at the end of the day the remarks I heard made it so much clearer to me that Yes, I did want to have a Child! Having a Child would be a way of perpetuating my life into eternity. Through my Children I can touch the future beyond my time and continue making a difference. So, there!

Well, years later, many years later, here I am with a 12 year old Child of my own!
If you have Children in your life, yours or not, make certain from this day on that you will look at them in a different way. If you have not looked at them as our world's future, do so. If you have never looked at them and looked for WHO they really are as individuals, do so! Assume a "New" You! A You who honors ALL Children around you. A You who looks them in the eyes and explores who they are and what they have that is unique to them. A You that takes the time to talk to them and help them find out more about themselves. Look at their talents, explore them.

We all have a purpose. The "new" You will assist the Younger Ones around you getting clear on their life purpose as early as possible. My "new" self has made a conscious choice of looking at Sade as an individual who needs to learn about herself and her "why" as early as possible. With my help this becomes easier and faster. So...let's go to work with/for our world's Young Ones! ☺
